Swapnil wins bronze; third medal for India in shooting

MIHIR VASAVDA
Chateauroux, August 1

ON A RAINY match-day morning, Indian rifle shooter Swapnil Kusale fixed himself a cup of hot tea but couldn't soak in the delightful weather. "I woke up with butterflies in my stomach," he said. "I love tea, and hoped it would calm me down."

He wasn't alone in grappling with anxiety. Far away from the Olympics shooting venue at Chateauroux, in New Delhi's CR Park, Kusale's coach Deepali Deshpande was consoling another ward of hers, Arjun Babuta, who had returned from Paris after experiencing one of Olympics' cruellest fates: missing a medal by a margin finer than a pinhead.

In his 10m final earlier in the week, Babuta dropped from the silver medal position to fourth place in the final few shots. When the same happened to Kusale on Thursday, dropping from second place to fourth, Deshpande was bracing for another consolation speech.

But it won't be needed. Instead, when Kusale called Deshpande, his "second mother", a few happy tears flowed in between the joyous screams.

Kusale, a railway ticket collector, was now an Olympic medallist. The 28-year-old, who idolises MS Dhoni because of a “reliable life story”, held his breath and controlled his pounding heart to avoid heartbreak and win a bronze medal in the 50m rifle 3-position — an event dubbed as the “Test match of shooting” because of the wide range of skills it tests.

On a day of mixed fortunes, where serious medal contenders — Satwiksairaj and standing positions, Kusale tallied a total of 451.4. He finished behind Chinese gold medalist Liu Yukun and Serhiy Kulish, the Ukrainian shooter whose medal hopes in Tokyo three years ago were dashed most bizarrely when he, by mistake, shot someone else's target.

On Thursday, Kulish shot to redemption and Kusale made sure India enjoyed another historic day at the shooting ranges of Chateauroux.

Last Sunday, Manu Bhaker became the first Indian woman shooter to win a medal at the Olympics. A couple of days later, the 22-year-old became the first Indian since Independence to win two medals at the same Olympics.

Kusale's bronze will also go down as one for the history books — for the first time, India has won three medals in one sport at the same Olympics.

It's fitting that it was shooting that achieved this record — India's medal rush in this century was started by shooters, who have also now redeemed themselves at the Paris Games, returning with three medals after back-to-back ducks in Rio and Tokyo. That Kusale would be among those to stand on the podium was a pleasant surprise.

His wildly oscillating fortunes during Thursday's hour-long final was, in a way, a synopsis of Kusale's entire career: Never a favourite, just doing enough to stay in contention and riding on the wave of unpredictability.

A man of very few words, Kusale has spent his entire career playing second fiddle to others and been the “nearly man” of Indian shooting.

The journey to the podium hadn't been easy for Swapnil Kusale. His father, a school teacher, had taken a bank loan to support his sporting dream. He was never a favourite, just doing enough to stay in contention and riding on the wave of unpredictability PTI
